No. 24—The Care of Floors

The care of floors has almost as much to do with their satisfactory appearance as the proper choice of material or color in the first instance. Neglect of the necessary care will seriously detract from the effect of any floor, no matter what the material.

Never use water in cleaning a painted, stained, waxed or varnished floor unless you wish to deaden the surface and spoil it. First, carefully wipe off all dust and dirt with a soft rag. If the floor has a waxed surface, apply the wax floor paste, a very little at a time, and then polish with a rag, brush or polishing mop. Kerosene as a floor cleanser is no more to be recommended than water. It dulls the surface and leaves a certain moisture which catches dust and forms a gummy deposit.

For waxed, varnished or shellacked surfaces, whether the floor is hardwood or only painted or stained, a highly satisfactory cleansing mixture consists of one part of crude oil to three parts of benzene applied with a soft rag. Be very careful not to use too much at a time and don't let it stay too long on the surface to be cleansed. Be still more careful to wipe off every bit of it with a dry woolen rag after using.

INDIAN TRIBE CHARADES

As all players do not know how to pronounce every Indian tribe name, it is well to make this game one of fractional charades, and to proceed according to spelling rather than in accordance with pronunciation in such French-Indian names, for instance, as Sioux, Iroquois and Apache. The quiz for the trial name "Apache" may be given out thus: "Two-thirds of a monkey, and a pain," to which the answer it "Ap (e)-ache." (The proper pronunciation, of course, is "Ap-ah-chay").

The leader reads the quizzes, one by one, or has them numbered and written on a list in view of all the players. The player having the largest number of correct answers at the end of a given time become Indian Chief and director of the next game, or he may impose Indian forfeit on the other players.

Here are twelve charades and their Indian tribal answers: 1—A glen, a note in music and merchandise. 2—A body of water, a pronoun, an exclamation, and an opener. 3—An Irish playwright, and part of the body. 4—An exclamation, and a wise man. 5—A black bird. 6—A cutter of wood, and a preposition. 7—Half, a negative, and a Confederate general. 8—To cut down, and a bird of prey. 9—A letter, an article, an outer garment, and an exclamation. 10—Small rivers. 11—A proposition, black substance, a pronoun, and an exclamation. 12—A shaving of wood, two-thirds of a favorite, and two-thirds of an armed conflict.

Answers: 1—Delaware (dell-a-ware). 2—Cherokee (sea-her-O-key). 3—Shawnee (knee). 4—O-sage. 5—Crow. 6—Huron (hewer-on). 7—Semi-no-le (Lee). 8—Mohawk (mow-hawk). 9—Dakota (D-a-koat-ah). 10—Creeks. 11—On-tar-i-o. 12—Chippewa (pet, war).

War Bread

Two cups cornmeal.
One-half teaspoon salt.
Two tablespoons melted lard.
Scald the meal, thin with cold water to a thick batter, mold into cakes the size of a large batter cake and the thickness of a thin biscuit, and fry brown on both sides. Then run the griddle iron into a warm oven and bake for about twenty minutes. The result is something between a Mexican tortilla and an old-fashioned corn pone, without the flabbiness of the one or the underdone taste of the other.

ANSWERS TO TUESDAY'S QUERIES

Sir Walter Scott was the author of "Ivanhoe."

The origin of "April Fool's Day" is supposed to have been the change in the calendar which made the New Year commence on January 1 instead of March 25. The merriest incident to the latter days of March remained and, finally, culminated on April 1, when "any fool thing" goes.

A pomegranate is the fruit of a tree of the same name, having a hard rind and a pulp with many seeds. ## The House of Magic Jack and Janet came upon a house of bark where dwells an Indian Medicine Man, who holds under enchantment an Indian maiden and young chief whom he has turned into a fawn and a wolf. The evil Medicine Man plans to have the wolf kill the fawn.

CHAPTER V

The Magic Pot

Whirling Snake, the Indian Medicine Man, looked in triumph at the Indian maiden and the young chief whom he had turned into a timid fawn and a fierce wolf.

"Ah ha! I shall call the Indian tribe to a great feast," chanted Whirling Snake in his evil song. I shall feed them with magic food, and thus gain their hearts. They will make me their chief when the wolf devours the fawn."

The wolf, who was Chief Swift Wolf under enchantment—snarled savagely. He gnashed his teeth and vainly tried to leap toward the Medicine Man.

Whirling Snake laughed at the wolf's frantic efforts to get loose. He walked to the door of the house of bark and raised his voice in a loud call.

"Hoi-ya! Hoi-ya! Come all ye hungry Indians to my feast!" he cried. "Come, bold braves, come ye squaws, come ye paposes! I will feed ye well with my magic food!"

"Ghosts!" whispered Red Mask.
"Is this house haunted?"

The Indians came flocking at the call. Jack and Janet could see them through the open door. They were wild Indians, wrapped in blankets and with feathers sticking in their braided hair. They gathered around the house of bark in a large circle. At the order of the Medicine Man they built great fires on which to roast the magic food he was to provide.

"Ah ha! Now who will help me in my magic?" cried Whirling Snake. "I need a dozen sparrows and six fat mice and two big rats!"

At that strange request the Indian boys ran about excitedly, hunting for sparrows and mice and rats. Soon they came with a dozen sparrows, six fat mice and two big rats.

The Medicine Man took the sparrows, the mice and the rats into the house of bark and closed the door so none outside might see what he did.

He spit a sparrow on the end of a spear and plunged it into his magic pot. At the same time he muttered queer words, "Hullabaloo, magic stew, do, do, what I want you to do." He drew the spear out and on the end where the sparrow had been was a large turkey, ready to be broiled and eaten. He placed the turkey aside and took up another sparrow. This, too, he changed into a turkey, and so on with all the others until he had a dozen fine turkeys.

Then the Medicine Man put a mouse on the spear and plunged it into the pot. Instantly the mouse grew so large it overflowed the pot. The Medicine Man had to use all his strength to lift it out. It had been changed into a fat pig, ready to be broiled and eaten. And so it went with the other five mice. All became pigs.

When the Medicine Man came to the rats, he cut each into four pieces with his sharp tomahawk. When he plunged these into the magic pot they turned into quarters of beef, ready to be broiled and eaten.

"Here is your feast!" cried the Medicine Man, opening the door of the house of bark and beginning to hand out the turkeys, pigs and quarters of beef. The Indians whooped with joy, and dragged the magic food to the fires to finish cooking it.

When the last quarter of beef had been dragged away, the Medicine Man closed the door and turned to Jack and Janet. "Ah ha! Now I am going to turn you into young bears," he muttered. "After Chief Swift Wolf has devoured the lovely Spotted Fawn and been slain for his hide, we will have a bear hunt, and that will be the last of you."

That was bad news, but Jack was ready for it. He had thought of a plan to save himself and Janet and the enchanted Indian maiden and young chief as well.

(What Jack's plan was and how it works will be told Tuesday.)
